July in Washington

By Robert Lowell

The stiff spokes of this wheel touch the sore spots of the earth.

On the Potomac, swan-white power launches keep breasting the sulphurous wave.

Otters slide and dive and slick back their hair, raccoons clean their meat in the creek.

On the circles, green statues ride like South American liberators above the breeding vegetation—

prongs and spearheads of some equatorial backland that will inherit the globe.

The elect, the elected . . . they come here bright as dimes,
and die dishevelled and soft.

We cannot name their names, or number their dates—circle on circle, like rings on a tree—

but we wish the river had another shore,
some further range of delectable mountains,

distant hills powdered blue as a girl’s eyelid.
It seems the least little shove would land us there,

that only the slightest repugnance of our bodies
we no longer control could drag us back.

Robert Lowell, “July in Washington” from Collected Poems. Copyright © 2003 by Harriet Lowell and All rights reserved.

Caution: Users are warned that this work is protected under copyright laws and downloading is strictly prohibited. The right to reproduce or transfer the work via any medium must be secured with Farrar, Straus and Giroux, LLC.

Source: Collected Poems (Farrar Straus and Giroux, 2003)