“oh antic God”

By Lucille Clifton

oh antic God
return to me my mother in her thirties leaned across the front porch the huge pillow of her breasts pressing against the rail summoning me in for bed.

I am almost the dead woman’s age times two.

I can barely recall her song the scent of her hands though her wild hair scratches my dreams at night. return to me, oh Lord of then and now, my mother’s calling, her young voice humming my name.

Source: Mercy (BOA Editions, Ltd., 2004)