

Poem

By Jorie Graham

The earth said
remember me.

The earth said
don't let go,

said it one day
when I was accidentally listening, I

heard it, I felt it
like temperature,
all said in a
whisper—build tomorrow, make right befall, you are not

free, other scenes
are not taking place, time is not filled, time is not late, there is a thing the emptiness needs as you need

emptiness, it
shrinks from light again & again, although all things are present, a

fact a day a bird that warps the
arithmetic of perfection with its

arc, passing again &
again in the evening
air, in the prevailing wind, making no

mistake—yr indifference is yr
principal beauty
the mind says all the time—I hear it—I hear it everywhere. The earth

said remember

me. I am the earth it said. Remember me.

Source: Poetry (January 2020)