By Joseph Bruchac

Seeing photos of ancestors a century past

is like looking at your own fingerprints—

circles and lines you can’t recognize until someone else with a stranger’s eye looks close and says that’s you.

Source: Sing: Poetry from the Indigenous Americas (University of Arizona Press, 2011)