Rock Me, Mercy

By Yusef Komunyakaa

The river stones are listening because we have something to say.
The trees lean closer today.
The singing in the electrical woods has gone dumb. It looks like rain because it is too warm to snow.
Guardian angels, wherever you’re hiding,
we know you can’t be everywhere at once.
Have you corralled all the pretty wild horses? The memory of ants asleep in daylilies, roses, holly, & larkspur.
The magpies gaze at us, still waiting. River stones are listening.
But all we can say now is,
Mercy, please, rock me.

Yusef Komunyakaa, "Rock Me, Mercy" from The Emperor of Water Clocks. Copyright © 2015 by Yusef Komunyakaa. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus and Giroux.

Source: The Emperor of Water (Farrar Straus and Giroux, 2015)