Rocket
By Todd Boss

Despite that you
wrote your name
and number
on its fuselage
in magic marker

neither your quiet
hours at the kitchen
table assembling
it with glue

nor your choice of paint and lacquer

nor your seemingly equally perfect
choice of a seemingly breezeless day
for the launch of your ambition

nor the thrill
of its swift ignition

nor the heights
it streaks

nor the dancing
way you chase
beneath its
dot

across that seemingly endless
childhood field

will ever be restored to you

by the people
in the topmost
branches of whose trees

unseen

it may yet from its plastic
chute
on thin
white
string
still swing.

Source: Poetry (November 2013)