Saguaro

By Javier Zamora

It was dusk for kilometers and bats in the lavender sky,

    like spiders when a fly is caught, began to appear.
And there, not the promised land, but barbwire and barbwire with nothing growing under it. I tried to fly that dusk after a bat said la sangre del saguaro nos seduce. Sometimes

    I wake and my throat is dry, so I drive to botanical gardens to search for red fruit clutched to saguaros, the ones at dusk

    I threw rocks at for the sake of slashing hunger.
But I never find them here. These bats say speak English only.

Sometimes in my car, that viscous red syrup clings to my throat, and it’s a tender seed toward my survival:

    I also scraped needles first, then carved those tall torsos for water, then spotlights drove me and thirty others dashing into palos verdes, green-striped trucks surrounded us, our empty bottles rattled and our breath spoke with rust.

    When the trucks left, a cold cell swallowed us.
