Sign

By George Starbuck

Virgin, sappy, gorgeous, the right-now
    Flutters its huge prosthetics at us, flung
    To the spotlights, frozen in motion, center-ice.

And the first rows, shaken with an afterslice
    That’s bowled them into their seats like a big wet ciao.
    O daffy panoply O rare device

O flashing leg-iron at a whopping price
    Whipping us into ecstasies and how,
    The whole galumphing Garden swung and swung,

A rescue helicopter’s bottom rung
    Glinting and spinning off, a scud of fluff,
    A slash of petals up against the bough,

A juggler’s avalanche of silken stuff
    Gushing in white-hot verticals among
    Camels and axels and pyramids, oh wow,

Bewilderment is parachute enough.
    We jolt. A sidewise stutterstep in chorus.
    The other billboards flicker by before us.

Gone! with a budded petulance that stung.
    So talented! So targeted! So young!
    Such concentration on the bottom line!

We vanish down the IRT. A shine.
    A glimmer. Something. Nothing. To think twice
    Was to have lost the trick of paradise.

George Starbuck, “Sign” from The Works: Poems Selected from Five Decades. Copyright © 2003 by University of Alabama (Tuscaloosa). Reprinted with the permission of The University of Alabama Press.