Surfaces

By Kay Ryan

Surfaces serve
  their own purposes,
  strive to remain
  constant (all lives want that). There is a skin, not just on peaches but on oceans (note the telltale
slough of foam on beaches).
Sometimes it’s loose,
as in the case
of cats: you feel how a second life slides
under it. Sometimes it fits. Take glass.
Sometimes it outlasts
its underside. Take reefs.

The private lives of surfaces are innocent, not devious.
  Take the one-dimensional belief of enamel in itself, the furious autonomy
of luster (crush a pearl—it’s powder), the whole curious seamlessness of how we’re each surrounded and what it doesn’t teach.
