What It Does

By David Ferry

The sea bit,
   As they said it would,
   And the hill slid,
   As they said it would,
   And the poor dead
   Nodded agog
   The poor head.

O topmost lofty
   Tower of Troy,
The poem apparently
Speaks with joy
Of terrible things.
Where is the pleasure
The poetry brings?

Tell if you can,
   What does it make?
A city of man
That will not shake,
Or if it shake,
Shake with the splendor
Of the poem’s pleasure.

Source: Poetry (July 2011)